Land innovations to foster rural regeneration and generational renewal in Europe 🧑🌾

In a new report submitted to the European Commission in October, the RURALIZATION consortium tackles the question of innovative land practices. Documenting 64 innovative practices across 14 European countries, the study explores how a variety of actors—farmers themselves but also citizens, local authorities, rural development organisations, and others—work for a better access to land and preservation of farmland in Europe. Keep up with the last

RURALIZATION trend analysis already finished!

Under RURALIZATION WP4 – Foresight analysis we have just finished the analysis on trends that affect rural regeneration in Europe. Three types of trends were identified: Megatrends, trends and weak signals. Read more!

1
AGEING POPULATION

Average age of the population is quite high and increasing in many rural regions, which increases the demand of targeted services

- Type: megatrend
- Drivers: demographic change, globalisation, economic growth; skills and competences, human capital
- Impacts: expansion of silver economy implies more demand for care and health services – structural evolution of farms will be hampered or slow down, e.g. succession, land use, resources – migration from rural to urban areas will increase

8
CHEAP RURAL HOUSING AND RURAL SECOND HOMES

Affordable houses, second homes or holiday houses close to nature and away from crowds

- Type: weak signal
- Drivers: availability of jobs, technological development, pandemics, economic growth, urbanisation
- Impacts: entry of new inhabitants to rural areas – demand for ecological, affordable and safe rural housing will increase – growth of local rural economies (incomes, jobs) – migration from urban to rural areas will increase – demand for land will increase for residential purposes
